

MY CORNER OF THE WORLD · VOLUME 3

Holding the spool was never the hard part.

Ananya has held her brother's kite spool for three years. Rohan flies. She follows orders.

Then Rohan comes home with eight stitches in his hand and a story that doesn't add up, and the Makar Sankranti duel is two weeks away. Ananya wants to fly too. All she needs is a color worth seeing, and one square of saffron cotton in her father's workshop that isn't hers to take.

A novel about kites, cloth, a line nobody should cross, and what it costs to be seen.
