

MY CORNER OF THE WORLD · VOLUME 1

Next time, I'll ask first.

Tomorrow is New Year's Day, and a chicken has just eaten the corner of the first page of Sokha's diary. He is twelve, always has a plan, and doesn't always listen to the end. His sister Maly is nine, walks with a wooden crutch tied with a pink ribbon, and would like to be asked what she wants.

In a village where old mines left by decades of war still close some paths, the road to school gets longer and the class has to move. Sokha is sure he knows exactly how to fix everything for Maly. He is wrong. A secret plan, a seam that slips and a meeting under the tree teach him that helping and deciding are not the same thing.

A novel in diary form about a brother who learns to ask, a sister who tells her own story, and a village that decides school is worth carrying from one house to another. For readers 9 to 12, alone or read aloud.
