

MY CORNER OF THE WORLD · Volume 2

A sister can love without disappearing.

On the first day of school, Katya irons her white blouse and walks to the gate, even though nobody knows if the school will open. At eight o'clock, the bell doesn't ring. She records the silence and starts a red notebook for the three men of her family, who are all away.

One night in November, a bridge falls and everything changes. Katya is fourteen, and suddenly someone else's whole world depends on her hands. As the year goes on, she learns to accept help, to listen as well as to count, and to ask before she keeps anyone's story.

A novel about war seen from a kitchen table, a cellar and a school without a bell. About grief, responsibility, and the right of every person to decide how their own story is told.
